ent skills.

"The families also said they like the fact of being able to do it with their kids so it is a family unit, it makes them more comfortable," MacInnes said.

At this camp-in, the Scouts set up tents, played games, watched movies and completed a variety of activities in order to earn Scout achievements.

The achievements included rank advancements, camping merit badges and cooking merit badges.

The Scouts were in charge of planning out and cooking the meals for the weekend. The girl Scout troop and some of the older Cub Scouts were primarily in charge of this work.

"To help them learn how to cook we have one of the lodge members who is going to be there and help them make homemade party-sized pizzas from scratch," MacInnes said.

Later on there will be outdoor camp-outs at the Scout reservation, and this event was intended to prepare them for that.

"At this camp-in they will be learning how to set the tents, how to set the sleeping bags, or air mattress or cot,"

MacInnes said. "It shows that they can do it...it's a way to start them off so they're not as nervous."

MacInnes hopes that this event will make it easier once the Scouts move to outdoor camping. This way they already have basic knowledge in how to cook and set-up camp, so when they are outdoors they can focus more on learning new skills.

The families and the youth agreed that starting indoors would be best and then they can move to camping in the woods, which all of the kids are excited for.

This event also helped the older youth to prepare for a Camperie that will happen at the end of October.

"It's a way for them to start learning the outdoors," MacInnes said.

The Scouts primarily planned out the entirety of the event. They have been working on detailing everything over the last two months so this camp-in could be fun and help them all learn.

"They planned on each activity they're going to be learning," MacInnes said. "From the Cub Scouts to the Troop Level, they planned our menu, the movies we're going to be watching, the activities to keep everybody entertained. It's all planned by the youth, we just guide them a little bit."

MacInnes is proud of all of the effort they put forward to make this event possible.

"It's a way for them to start learning the outdoors."
